

Physician Directory for
Asian Women's Health 2011

SERVING THE CHICAGO METROPOLITAN AREA

About the Directory

The Chicago metropolitan area includes the City of Chicago and surrounding Cook, Dupage and Kane counties. It is the 6th largest concentration of Asian Americans in the country with over 550,000 individuals. Nearly two-thirds of Asian Americans in Chicago metropolitan area are foreign-born and many immigrants populations are highly vulnerable to negative health outcomes because of pre-existing barriers to health care including 1) linguistic and financial barriers to the implementation of public health interventions, 2) limited access to and poor usage of preventive medical care, and 3) cultural and religious attitudes and practices that are poorly understood by Western health professionals.

This Women's Health Physician Directory is designed to help community members in finding culturally and linguistically appropriate physician resources. The physicians listed in this directory serve Asian Americans in the Chicagoland area and provide care for breast and cervical health.

This directory is geared toward culturally competent physicians with translation services readily available. Note that resource information is constantly changing and not all Asian American physicians are listed in this directory.

If you would like to be a part of this directory or have other additions or corrections, please submit all information to the Asian Health Coalition at info@asianhealth.org

Disclaimer: All the physician providers and resources that are listed in this Physician Directory are not endorsed by the Asian Health Coalition, but are provided as suggestions. The Asian Health Coalition assumes no liability for the use of any services mentioned.

Cancer Among Asian Americans

Cancer: Cancer is one of the leading causes of death among women in the U.S. Breast and cervical cancer affects the Asian subpopulations disproportionately. The rate of breast and cervical cancer among some Asian subpopulations is almost double the rate of their Caucasian counterparts leading to higher morbidity and mortality. Furthermore, screening rates among the population is also much lower adding to the increased disparity between Asian American women and their Caucasian counterparts.

Breast Cancer: Breast cancer is the most commonly diagnosed form of cancer in women (American Cancer Society (ACS), 2008) and the 2nd leading cause of cancer deaths among Asian American and Pacific Islander women (AAPI) in the United States. Since the 1980s breast cancer rates have risen 4.5% each year. In 2008, 226,510 women in the United States were diagnosed with breast cancer and an estimated 40,580 women died of breast cancer (ACS, 2008). All women are at risk for breast cancer and the risk increase as women get older, especially after age 40.

Breast cancer rates among Asian Americans, though traditionally lower than those of other American women, are changing as women adopt more "Westernized" lifestyles. Early detection of breast cancer through periodic mammography, clinical breast examination (CBE) and self-breast exam (BSE), has been shown to be effective in reducing mortality in women aged 50 and older, and may also be effective for women aged 40 to 50. Despite the proven advantages, AAPI women exhibit the lowest rates of breast and cervical cancer screening of any other racial and ethnic group in the US. Women of ethnic subgroups and those who immigrated to the United States in the last ten years are less likely to have had a recent mammogram.

Cervical Cancer: Cervical cancer is a highly preventable cancer among women who receive periodic Pap screenings. Early detection is key in higher survival rates from cervical cancer and it is alarming that AAPI women have the lowest rates of cervical cancer screening among any other racial and ethnic group in the U.S. While the overall rates of cervical cancer incidence are less among AAPI women compared to other ethnic groups, some AAPI populations have rates that are the highest in the nation. By comparison to the cervical cancer rate among Caucasian women (8.7/100,000), the rate of cervical cancer for Vietnamese American women (43.0/100,000) is unacceptably high. Similarly, according to the American Cancer Society, rates for cervical cancer among Cambodian women (15.3/100,000) are nearly double that of white women in the U.S.

Asian Health Coalition Cancer Education & Prevention Program

The Asian Health Coalition (AHC) is a grassroots organization created by community members and health care providers in December 1996 and incorporated in 1998 with non-profit 501(c)(3) status. The mission of AHC is to improve the health and well-being of Asian Americans in Illinois through community health programs, advocacy, capacity building, and community-engaged research.

The Asian Health Coalition developed the Breast and Cervical Cancer Education & Prevention (BCCEP) program in 2008 with initial funding support from the Ravenswood Health Care Foundation to educate, increase screening rates and link women to care among the Cambodian, Vietnamese and Chinese communities on Chicago's medically underserved northside Uptown neighborhood. In 2010, the program's successes led to the expansion into the Muslim American and South Asian communities in Chicago's Rogers Park and surrounding Cook County neighborhoods.

The BCCEP program aims to reduce cancer-related health disparities among Asian American women through:

- Enhancing community awareness and knowledge about breast and cervical cancer risks and prevention strategies
- Increasing breast and cervical cancer screening rates among Asian American women through strengthened linkage to care network development
- Building the capacity of community health workers and lay health educators to provide culturally and linguistically tailored support and referral for their community members.

The agency is extremely grateful to the following community partners for their collaboration and support in this program:

Cambodian Association of Illinois
Chinese Mutual Aid Association
Metropolitan Asian Family Services
Muslim Women Resource Center
Vietnamese Association of Illinois
